Une petite explication par l'équipe du CHENE

rédaction : Christine Blaize / Mise en page : Candie Hérault

SEATURTLE.ORG est une organisation à but non lucratif dédiée au développement de nouvelles ressources pour améliorer les efforts de recherche et de conservation des tortues marines.

Pour cela elle organise l'information internationale sur ces espèces, et la rend accessible et utilisable par un très large public.

SEATURTLE.ORG est un site créé par Michael Coyne.

A l'origine il était surtout consacré aux personnes travaillant sur les tortues marines. Depuis il s'est ouvert à d'autres espèces.

Ce site fournit toute une série d'outils utiles à la cartographie, c'est également un lieu d'échange d'informations, de connaissances, à propos des animaux étudiés mais aussi de problèmes techniques rencontrés.

Introduction

The main purpose of this study is to know how a rehabilitated harbour seal (Phoca vitulina) reintegrates his natural habitat.

CHENE is a rehabilitated center for all wildlife. Each year, we take care of harbors, useally young ones, coming from beach in the north of France (from Baie du

The screenshot shows the Idefix website interface. On the left is a navigation menu with links like 'Sponsorship Program', 'Adoption Program', and 'Partners'. The main content area features the title 'Study of young rehabilitated harbour seal in the north of France' and details for a harbor seal project, including its species, life stage, gender, release date, and location. A map shows the seal's movement path. On the right, there is an 'Adoption Program' section with images of other seals and their adoptive parents. A blue box highlights the 'Adoptive Parents' list: Steve and Helen Dierdorf, Heather Sewell, Rhett Dawson, E. Parness, and David Grega.

Avertissement

Certains points sont situés dans les terres. La localisation par satellite n'est pas toujours très précise.

Il convient d'interpréter ces points comme étant la zone dans laquelle le phoque se situe.
